Let the hunt for volunteers begin

2017 SUMMER GAMES

Organizers say they're looking for those proud to show off city

Matt Kieltyka
Metro | Winnipeg

The race is on to recruit an army of volunteers for next year's Canada Summer Games in Winnipeg.

Organizers officially launched their volunteer registration process on Tuesday, and have set a target of 6,000 volunteers for the 50th anniversary of Canada's largest multi-sport event for young athletes.

Volunteer positions run the gamut of tasks, from transportation, food services and security to hosting, festival management and being involved in the opening, closing and medal ceremonies at the Games.

People can even enroll in the Games' mascot program.

Daniel Lussier, chair of the Games' volunteer engagement committee, said 120 people had already applied for positions within five hours of registration opening Tuesday morning.

"There is lots to be done. What we're really looking for are people who are friendly, courteous and willing to celebrate youth sport and community," Lussier told Metro. "We want people who are proud of Winnipeg to greet 4,000 young athletes and the 20,000 people who will be visiting Manitoba and Winnipeg."

Lussier said organizers will do their best to make sure people's skill sets and interest line up as close as possible to volunteer positions during the event, which could prove invaluable experience on a resume.

The registration process, available through the event's website, asks people whether they have specific medical and computer skills and certifications, whether they have access to a vehicle, if they have experience leading a team and how many shifts they'd be willing to work per day.

They can also select the specific volunteer positions they'd be willing to do during the Games.

Lussier hopes the event will be able to reach its target of 6,000 volunteers by January.

Winnipeg will host the 2017 Canada Summer Games from July 28 to Aug. 13, 2017.

Youth know what they need

COMMUNITY PROGRAMMING

Agencies trust clients with guiding their own support

Matt Kieltyka
Metro | Winnipeg

Wisdom isn't just for elders anymore.

A collection of Winnipeg community organizations are increasingly turning toward the very people they serve — youth — to find out what programming their communities need most.

The Youth Agencies Alliance (YAA), an umbrella organization representing 18 groups throughout the city, held its second annual fundraiser at Shaw Park on Tuesday to serve 140 supporters lunch and showcase the talent of young people who have come through various programs.

The event also marked a year since YAA started taking direction from its clients in the form of youth councils.

The alliance's executive director, Karen Ferris, said two youth from each organization have been meeting regularly over the past 12 months to tell service providers about the challenges facing their communities and what can be done to address them.

That's led to providers retooling programs and focusing on four critical areas identified by the council: education, public safety, mental illness and discrimination.

"More than ever, people are willing to talk about the real issues in a real way and not sugarcoat things. That's something we've found very valuable, to hear straight from the youth instead of filtering it through the agencies," said Ferris. "We've shifted our way of thinking and operating and we're open to taking leadership from them. It's something the YAA has never had in the past."

Together, the 18 member agencies of the YAA serve thousands of youth each year.

One of the young women to find her voice thanks to its programs is 17-year-old singer, dancer and artist Anna Middleton, who performed at Tuesday's fundraiser.

Bullied at school and short of confidence, Middleton joined Graffiti Art Programming three years ago.

Now she performs publicly and landed a summer job mentoring newcomers to the program.

"I'm able to be a leader and mentor for these little kids," said Middleton. "I was able to help them from a different point of view, because I saw how hard it was when you go there and are a kid just trying to express yourself. It's cool that it's not just my safe place, but their safe place as well."

+ DOING THE GOOD WORK

Anna Middleton, 17, said the programs have helped her become a mentor to other inner-city kids.

Graffiti Art Programming, North End

GAP offers free arts classes and programming for youth living in the north end.

Executive director Stephen Wilson said the organization was founded in 1998 on the premise that school-aged children who are involved in a form of dance, film, music or visual art do better in school.

That's vital in a community where just 50 per cent of youth graduate high school, compared to 89 per cent in the rest of the city.

"And then we wonder, 'What's the problem? What's going on?' Well, here is the problem: education," said Wilson. "We feel that we're playing our little bit to help a young person get through school."

GAP provides after-school classes to 4,000 youth each year and also supports public performances and art projects for its students.

Patrick LeBlanc says organizations like his are integral to giving people a sense of belonging.

Teen Stop Jeunesse, Southdale

While in a more suburban part of the city, Teen Stop had 12,000 visits to its youth centre last year for various life skills, art, computer lab and recreational programs.

"The kids are coming from some pretty difficult situations, whether it be single-parent families or foster homes. Situations where they need something just a little bit more than they're getting at home," explained executive director Patrick LeBlanc. "The primary goal is for kids to feel like they're welcomed and feel like they belong."

LeBlanc said he's recently re-connected with a single mother of six whose children attended the centre 10 years ago. She thanked him for supporting her family when parts of society had written them off. The family has since climbed out of poverty.

"That's how important an organization like ours is to any community," he said.

A sober message on sex assault

CAMPUS LIFE

Campaign focuses on consent and drinking

Stephanie Taylor
Metro | Winnipeg

The University of Winnipeg's campus walls are once again decorated with flashy posters about sexual consent. But this year, the messages convey a different tone.

As part of the school's overall sexual misconduct awareness campaign, which launched in March 2015, program administrators have honed in on what one co-ordinator says is a big question facing many students: Can someone who is drunk consent to sex?

"We make a lot of assumptions about victims of sexual assault," Jan Byrd, the university's executive director of wellness and student life, said Tuesday.

"One of the first things people think about, whether they want to or not was, 'Well, was the victim drinking?'"

To prevent that victim-blaming, she said 150 posters have been pinned up around the school with the taglines, "Drinking isn't a crime, sexual assault is," and "Alcohol causes hangovers, not sexual assault."

"Posters don't change behaviour," added Byrd.

"It's meant to start a conversation."

So far, she said 2,000 students enrolled in the 2016-17 school year have participated in mandatory sessions where sexual assault prevention, consent and drinking or drug use, were discussed.

These are first-year students, athletes and those living on campus, she said, adding that

Jan Byrd, the university's executive director of wellness and student life, believes the school also needs a standalone sexual assault policy to communicate the gravity of the issue to students, faculty and the community. Right: One hundred and fifty of these posters have been placed around the University of Winnipeg campus. LYLE STAFFORD/FOR METRO some 2,500 students underwent similar sessions last year.

Nadia La Rosa, a special projects co-ordinator with Klinik Community Health Centre's sexual assault crisis program, believes navigating the boundaries of consent and alcohol consumption is complicated, but the Criminal Code of Canada is clear.

"You have to be able to give consent, which means you have to be awake, conscious and sober enough to make that clear decision," she explained Tuesday. "A person who's intoxicated cannot agree to have sex," she said.

La Rosa said more than half of the reported sexual violence experienced by young people involved alcohol.

"Either from the person that was victimized, or the person who was attacking the other person."

That isn't to say drinking alcohol leads to sexual violence, she said, but acknowledges there is a murky relationship between the two.

Laura Garinger, vice-president of student affairs with the University of Winnipeg Student Association —which assisted the school develop the campaign — said many young people are confused about what consent means when alcohol is a factor.

"Speaking from personal experience," said Garinger.

"I probably wouldn't have been able to tell you when I was 18 ... how people perceive consent when they're drunk."

Byrd said further work stills needs to be done on raising awareness about sexual assault and drinking.

For example, she said organizers will be focusing future efforts on what has been noted as an increase in binge drinking, particularly among young women, and a trend known as "drunkorexia" — when women who plan on consuming alcohol do not eat, so to cut down on calories, which leads to faster intoxication.

A spokesperson from the University of Manitoba said a new standalone sexual assault policy took effect Sept. 1, and there is information across campus that focuses on sexual violence and booze.

Fido lovers are ditching kibble for organic, raw options

It seems like kismet that one of the inspirations behind Planet Pup, a Winnipeg dog bakery, was a pooch named Biscuit.

Deb Kurdydyk, who runs the business from her kitchen, said the idea came to her after she started cooking hot organic meals for her Shepherd-Rottweiler mix and wondered, why not start baking cookies and cakes too?

"When I started doing it, people thought I was crazy," laughed the 50-year-old. "I had to explain to people that this was a thing. People do bake and cook for their dogs."

Planet Pup specializes in bone-shaped dog biscuits and birthday cakes. The treats, which are sold online and at some select local retailers, come in a variety of flavours including Wild Pacific salmon and smoked gouda, and elk, apple and blue cheese.

The niche business and others like it are hoping to corner a market that may be poised to grow.

According to market researcher Euromonitor, pet owners in Canada are still opting for prepared food due to convenience, but a rising number are turning to organic and raw pet food.

"Consistent and pervasive consumer focus on natural or organic ingredients in dog food is a natural outcome and extension from a general trend in health and wellness in Canadian society as a whole and that has helped shape the growing humanization trend in pet food," said the report, titled "Dog Food in Canada."

Karen Schiavone has been selling raw dog food at Barkside Bistro in Toronto's east end for three years after her two dogs died on the same night, both from cancer.

"I realized it was probably the food," said Schiavone. "Even if it didn't cause them to be sick, it likely contributed to it."

Barkside sells a variety of bones and meats, including beef, duck, elk, buffalo and kangaroo. She said the difference between buying raw dog food versus going to a butcher is being able to portion out the right amounts of bone, meat and organs.

The idea behind feeding dogs raw meat is that nutritional value is better retained.

Meghan Elenbaas, president of Lucky Dog Cuisine Canada, said people want to know exactly goes into their dog's food.

"We were brought up to believe that this is dog food," she said. "It's like if you ate Cheerios for the rest of your life. It's not necessarily bad, but you won't do well if that's the best food you ever ate." THE CANADIAN PRESS

POLICE REPORT

Budget set to go over by $6.5M

Stephanie Taylor
Metro | Winnipeg

A new financial update has the Winnipeg Police Service confronted with the prospect of going $6.5 million over budget by the end of 2016.

The report is to be tabled during Friday's meeting of the city's police board.

It outlines several reasons for the projected deficit, including an unexpected $3.7 million the city must pay into police pensions, which was the result of an actuarial review.

A 7.1 per cent salary increase under the collective agreement at the beginning of the year, and a continued drop in revenue from photo radar tickets, are also listed as factors.

Coun. Scott Gillingham, who chairs the police board, calls the $6.5 million deficit a "significant gap."

This fall, the current collective agreement expires, and it will be the City of Winnipeg that sits down at the bargaining table.

Canada not perfect on rights: PM

POLITICS

Trudeau raises concerns with China's elites

When Justin Trudeau raised concerns directly with China's political elite about their human-rights record, he says he acknowledged Canada isn't perfect.

The prime minister shared more details Tuesday about his high-level talks last week with Beijing, sessions that included face time with President Xi Jinping and Premier Li Keqiang.

Trudeau told a business luncheon in Hong Kong that he brought up his concerns in those meetings, ranging from consular cases, rule of law, governance and corruption.

"(I) talked about the challenges, but also talked about the fact that Canada is not immune to criticisms on human rights, either," he said during an on-stage interview hosted by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in Hong Kong.

"The perspective that a lot of countries have is, 'Well, you know, foreign countries or foreign observers shouldn't be criticizing what are internal matters to us.'"

He said he pointed out how a UN rapporteur put out a "scathing report" a few years ago on Canada's treatment of Indigenous Peoples, of missing and murdered aboriginal women and girls and other challenges.

Trudeau's Hong Kong event came on the last day of his eight-day official visit to China, a trip that also included stops in Beijing, Shanghai and Hangzhou for the Group of 20 leaders' summit.

His primary goal of the visit was to strengthen commercial ties with the Chinese regime. He repeated his argument Tuesday that Ottawa's connection to China was "hot and cold" when the Conservatives were in power.

Entomologists rally around bullied girl

Seven-year-old Sophia Spencer loves bugs so much she had her hair cut short so it wouldn't get in the way while she was catching them.

She keeps more than a dozen pet grasshoppers in a dinosaur bucket and Mason jar at home. Last year, her favourite bugs were snails, and the year before that she was fascinated with worms and ants.

After moving from Sarnia to Alexandria, Ont., and switching schools, her obsession with insects set her apart from the other kids and made her the butt of cruel jokes, according to her mom, Nicole.

The teasing started on the first day of school. Sophia was carrying a caterpillar around and talking to it, as she's prone to do, when a girl said: "You're weird. You shouldn't be playing with bugs."

The bullying only got worse, Nicole said. When Sophia brought another caterpillar to show-and-tell, a boy asked to see it after — then stomped on it.

"Nobody would go near her," her mom said.

She notified Sophia's teachers and still nothing changed, she said. The bullying had taken such a toll on her daughter's confidence that she wrote a heartfelt email to the Entomological Society of Canada. She asked the society to arrange a chat between Sophia and an insect specialist, to encourage her love of bugs.

"I want her to know from an expert that she is not weird or strange (what kids call her) for loving bugs and insects," Nicole wrote.

The email found its way to Jackson Morgan, the society's social media volunteer and a PhD student in entomology at Guelph University.

"I was heartbroken," he recalled. "I don't like hearing about anybody being bullied, especially about something I'm so passionate about."

He posted the email to Twitter, where it grabbed the attention of entomologists internationally.

By Friday, more than a hundred people agreed to be her pen pal, said Morgan. The social media discussion took on a life of its own under the hashtag #BugsR4Girls as entomologists the world over posted words of encouragement and pictures of themselves with creepy crawlies.

"I was inspired by brilliant female entomologists & I hope that I can do the same for others," tweeted Ashleigh Whiffen at the National Museums of Scotland.

Clinton, Trump: He's a national security danger; no, she is Hillary Clinton accused Donald Trump of insulting America's veterans and pressing dangerous military plans around the globe on Tuesday, seeking to undercut his appeal to service families in Southern voting battlegrounds. Trump declared "our country is going to hell" because of policies she would make even worse.

Clinton, addressing supporters in Florida, warned that Trump would lead the nation back to war in the Middle East. And to military vets and their families, she pointed anew to his summertime dust-up with the Muslim parents of a slain American soldier.

"His whole campaign has been one long insult to all those who have worn the uniform," the Democratic nominee said at the University of South Florida in Tampa.

The two presidential candidates are sending conflicting messages to voters. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Republican Trump, trying to emphasize his military support, released a letter from 88 retired generals and admirals citing an urgent need for a "course correction" in America's national security policy.

It was aimed at rebutting

Clinton's arguments that she would be best positioned to lead the military and reassuring Republicans who have openly worried that his provocative statements might undermine U.S. alliances.

"We believe that such a change can only be made by someone who has not been deeply involved with, and substantially responsible for, the hollowing out of our military and the burgeoning threats facing our country around the world," the military leaders wrote.

"For this reason, we support Donald Trump's candidacy to be our next commander in chief."

Clinton pushed back, saying Trump has lagged in securing key military supporters compared to past Republican nominees.

She pointed to her endorsements from retired Marine Gen. John Allen, who blasted Trump at the Democratic National Committee, and former CIA deputy director Mike Morell.

"They know they can count on me to be the kind of commander in chief who will protect our country and our troops, and they know they cannot count on Donald Trump," Clinton said en route to Florida. "They view him as a danger and a risk."

The conflicting messages came as the candidates prepared to appear at an MSNBC forum Wednesday night on national security. While they will appear separately and not be on stage at the same time, it could serve as a warm-up to their highly-anticipated first presidential debate on Sep. 26 in New York. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hurricane Newton slams into Mexican resorts

People ride bikes during the passage of Hurricane Newton in Baja California Sur, Mexico. AFP/GETTY IMAGES

Hurricane Newton shattered windows, downed trees and knocked out power in parts of the twin resorts of Los Cabos on Tuesday, but residents were spared the kind of extensive damage seen two years ago when they were walloped by a stronger storm.

Newton made landfall at the southern tip of Mexico's Baja California peninsula in the morning as a Category 1 hurricane with winds of 150 km/h, pelting the area with torrential rain as residents hunkered down in their homes and tourists huddled in hotels.

Palm trees were toppled along Cabo San Lucas' coastal boulevard and some windows were broken. But there was calm in the city as firefighters cleaned refuse from the streets during the day.

"There are only minor damages — fallen branches, some fallen banners, some cables ... in general, no victims," army Col. Enrique Rangel said.

"Just trying to make it through the day, with a little help," Mark Hernandez, a tourist from California, said as he raised a can of beer at one of the few bars open in Cabo San Lucas. "We pray for the city of Cabo San Lucas. It was a rough one as you can see."

Roberto Dominguez, a customer relations worker at the Fairfield Marriot, said the hotel's windows and balconies had been sufficiently protected from the storm and guests were fine, although cellphone and internet services had been knocked out.

"At this moment there are no reports of people killed or missing due to Hurricane Newton," said Luis Felipe Puente, head of Mexico's civil defence agency.

EU close to banning American lobsters

The European Union will conduct a more extensive review of a proposal to ban lobsters imported from the U.S. and Canada after a scientific panel concluded Sweden raised valid points in its request to declare the American lobster an invasive species.

The international dispute started when Sweden announced it had found 32 American lobsters in the country's waters earlier this year and that they pose a threat to native crustaceans. How the American lobsters ended up in Swedish waters is unclear.

Sweden's Agency for Marine and Water Management contends the country is right to be cautious about the appearance of a foreign species.

The agency also says more research is needed into the impact of cross-breeding of American and European lobsters.

But Robert S. Steneck, a University of Maine scientist, contends American lobsters don't pose a threat to European lobsters in part because winter ocean temperatures along the coasts of European countries are too warm for American lobsters to reproduce.

Canada's Fisheries Minister Dominic LeBlanc says the Canadian and American governments will "vigorously" try to convince the European Union that the American lobster does not pose a threat.

ban becomes a reality, but they contend a ban is not supported by science.

PAUL WELLS ON FEDERAL RESEARCH FUNDING

In giving $900 million to only 13 institutions and a few dozen researchers, the Liberals highlighted some disturbing trends in Canada's national science effort.

At first glance, the parade of cabinet ministers on university campuses across Canada yesterday might have looked like evidence of a new era in federal support for science.

Scott Brison was on hand at Dalhousie University in Halifax, which will work with the University of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland's Memorial University on a multidisciplinary ocean-studies project. The size of the grant from Ottawa: $94 million.

Kirsty Duncan and Bardish Chagger were in Waterloo, where the Institute for Quantum Computing picked up $76 million to create powerful new technology using quantum physics. And on it went: $78 million for flood and drought prediction at the University of Saskatchewan, $84 million for brain research at McGill, $94 million for big data at the Université de Montréal, $75 million for clean energy at each of Alberta's two biggest universities.

In all, 13 centres of higher learning split $900 million in grants under the Canada First Research Excellence Fund (CFREF), whose website says it was designed to help Canadian post-secondary institutions become "global research leaders."

Specifically — and this fact was not emphasized at any of the announcements on Tuesday — it was designed in 2014 by the former Conservative government, whose finance minister at the time, the late Jim Flaherty, announced CFREF in his 2014 budget.

This tidbit should elicit a wry chuckle from anyone who's used to hearing the Harper government dismissed as a bunch of knuckle-dragging backwoodsmen at war with the Enlightenment. There was indeed a lot to criticize about how Harper did science, but those Liberal ministers were out there on Tuesday cashing Conservative dozen researchers, serves to highlight some disturbing long-term trends in Canada's national science effort.

CFREF was created to allow big science in Canada to bulk up so it could compete against world-leading research institutions abroad. But it comes along at a moment when everyday science — the day-to-day efforts of researchers in labs across the country — has been struggling. The Harper government held the line on and productive work. Tony Pawson, the British-born cell biologist who died in Toronto in 2013, opened up a whole new field of lucrative and life-saving anti-cancer therapies with research that didn't cost much, showed little obvious promise, and began when he was 21.

Michael Hendricks, a McGill University biologist, pointed out yesterday that with $700 million — less than the amount that was spent yesterday — Ottawa could fund "1,000 Canadian research labs that are already equipped and ready to go but are starved for operating funds."

Does it make more sense to bet big on 13 research institutes or to bet long on 1,000 quiet explorers? Maybe you should do a bit of both. It's not as though the Trudeau government is ignoring the question: a federal review of science funding is underway, led by former University of Toronto president David Naylor, with a mandate to report by the end of the year.

Naylor is a pit bull, and his panel's website suggests it's considering precisely the sorts of questions I've raised here. But its composition is weighted toward administrators over early- and mid-career researchers, and decisions are being made even as it does its work. It will do little good to decide, after $900 million has been spent, that other choices might have been wiser.

Strong day-to-day advice might help while the expert panels do their consulting. But 10 months after the government was sworn in, Trudeau and his science minister have not appointed a senior federal science adviser, something they promised to do in the last election.

Flagship television news hasn't evolved much from its origins.

For most channels, news is still read by a person who is often a white man in an expensive suit. After some gravitas-laced reading aloud, he will throw over to a handful of correspondents dotted across the world then to a weather person. Then he'll wrap up with a lighter story.

"And finally, a waterskiing parrot has raised over $2,000 for the children's hospital. Our correspondent reports."

For Canadians, our Head of Gravitas has been Peter Mansbridge, CBC's host of The National, who has announced that he will longer host the flagship news show as of Canada Day 2017.

In 1993, Mans — as he's called by his very close friends/me — introduced Canadians to "a computer network called Internet." It's been 23 years now and it's time for the Internet to replace him. Video supposedly killed the radio star and yet we still know who Ira Glass and Anna Maria Tremonti are. So, yes, in the future, we will have news anchors. Sort of.

Ideally, the CBC will be at the forefront of existing technology and find a way to bridge Snapchat's filters and Pokémon Go's augmented reality layers onto broadcast news. Since Nahlah Ayed is going to trek to a tunnel under the Israeli-Palestinian border, why not allow the viewer to experience it from the safety of home? Maybe we can even keep Mans as a hologram, only now that reassuring voice and grey suit can wear a flower-crown filter.

Nothing from the CBC suggests that they have the ability to create a digital host. But on at least one front, they have the ability to push Canadian media past a major frontier: Do not give the National anchor job to another white man.

There's nothing essentially wrong with white men, but there are enough on TV at the moment, thank you very much. If you're not thrilled that a white man isn't reading the news, just wait an hour and a blinding array of white men can joke about the news on the late-night shows.

The CBC has a mandate to reflect Canadians back to Canada, and yet the corporation is incredibly white in a country that is at least a quarter visible minority. Recently, the CBC replaced Shad, a black man, with Tom Power, who is white, as host of Q. So they owe the Mansbridge replacement to the rest of us, who pay to see Canada reflected to us.

Peter Mansbridge exits the anchor's chair on Canada's 150th birthday. Let's step forward into our bright future by letting a person of colour tell my mom the day's sad news seven hours after I've read about it on Twitter.

(Since those cheques, whether red or blue, come out of your taxes, the difference is mostly one of dramatic effect. And this sort of policy continuity, where a new government implements an earlier government's decisions, is usually healthy, because it gives anyone who deals with government a chance to plan past the next election.)

But paternity is not the only interesting question to arise from yesterday's announcement. That $900 million, distributed among only 13 institutions and a few most operating grants to researchers, so fewer and fewer research applications have been receiving funding. The Canadian Institutes for Health Research, the main federal government vehicle for funding medical research, has seen its "success rate" fall to 13 per cent, and it will probably fall further.

That leaves a lot of frustrated and disillusioned scientists, many of them the younger early-career researchers who are entering precisely the period in their careers when most scientists do their most surprising

What grows together goes together

RECIPE

Get in the mood for autumn with this pork dish

Kitchen wisdom holds that produce that's in season at the same time will taste great on the same plate (what grows together, goes together, as the saying goes).

Here, sweet potatoes, apples, and Vidalia onion are roasted along with pork chops for an autumnal one-pan supper.

The tubers soak up the pan juices — flavoured with apple cider vinegar, apple cider, and caraway seeds — that are also drizzled over each serving.

Roasted Pork Chops with Sweet Potatoes and Apples Serves 4.

Ingredients:

- 4 bone-in pork chops (each about 10 ounces and 1 inch thick)
- Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper
- 1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
- 2 medium sweet potatoes, scrubbed and cut into ¼-inch-thick rounds
- 1 large sweet onion, such as Vidalia, cut into ¼-inch-thick rounds

- 1/3 cup apple cider vinegar, preferably unfiltered
- ½ cup unsweetened apple cider, preferably unfiltered
- 1 teaspoon caraway seeds
- 2 apples, preferably Honeycrisp, thinly sliced, seeds removed

Directions:

1. Preheat oven to 375°F. Season pork with salt and pepper. Heat a large ovenproof skillet over medium high; swirl in oil. Cook chops until golden brown, turning once, about 8 minutes total. Transfer to a plate. Remove all but 2 tablespoons fat from skillet.

2. Reduce heat to medium. Add potatoes and onion; season with salt. Cook until golden in spots, about 10 minutes. Add vinegar and cider. Cover and simmer, stirring a few times, until potatoes are tender, about 5 minutes. Sprinkle with caraway seeds.

3. Return pork and juices to skillet; tuck apple slices between chops. Roast until a thermometer inserted into thickest part of chops (without touching bone) registers 138°F, about 10 minutes. Serve pork, vegetables, and apples with pan juices.

Dropped out of school, discovered at an airport

RETIREMENT

Here's some things you may not know about Peter Mansbridge

Peter Mansbridge plans to step down from the anchor chair of CBC's The National after Canada's 150th birthday celebrations next July 1.

Mansbridge, 68, has held the post at CBC's flagship news program for almost 30 years.

His tenure includes covering every federal election since 1972 and anchoring all 10 since 1984. He has also hosted eight Olympic opening ceremonies, most recently in Rio last summer.

Here are a few facts about Mansbridge:

How he began

It's true: Mansbridge's broadcast career began in singular fashion in 1968, when he was working in the Churchill, Man. airport. He was a 19-year-old baggage handler at the time, filling in on the intercom. The station manager at the local CBC radio station heard his baritone over the intercom and offered him a job on-air. Mansbridge worked on CBC Radio's news service to the North and, by 1976, he was covering Parliament Hill.

Rambling childhood

He was born July 6, 1948 in London, England, into a foreign service family and spent much of his early childhood in Kuala Lumpur in the Federation of Malaya (now Malaysia). He moved to Canada as a child after his father took a job in Ottawa with the Canadian government. He didn't make it to the end of Grade 12, dropping out to join the navy.

He was honourably discharged.

Peter Mansbridge plans to step down as anchor on CBC's The National after Canada's 150th birthday celebrations next July. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE FILE

Higher education

He doesn't have a high school diploma and didn't attend journalism school. He does have nine honorary degrees and was named Chancellor of Mount Allison University in New Brunswick in 2009.

Toughest interview

He has particularly non-fond memories of an interview with former British prime minister Margaret Thatcher. "Few things go wrong, but when they do they're kind of catastrophic," he recalled to Toronto Star's Antonia Zerbisias. "I remember interviewing Margaret Thatcher and it was just a disaster. It was when she was on a book tour after she got out of the job (as British prime minister) and she kept accusing me of not having read her book, which sadly I had and it was brutal ... and I don't think she even wrote it. That was just one of those really awkward interviews that I didn't handle well. It was just bad."

Mentor and big brother

Mansbridge was offered a co-hosting spot by CBS on This Morning in November 1987 and there were reportedly big bucks attached. Knowlton Nash, then lead anchor of The National and chief correspondent of CBC News, offered to step aside to keep Mansbridge north of the border. Mansbridge assumed the chief correspondent and lead anchor role in May 1988, replacing Nash.

Mansbridge once told the Star that Nash was "everything from a big brother to a colleague to an uncle to a really good friend to a mentor."

No shocker he's leaving

"I've made it very clear to everybody that I have no intention of doing this job with a '7' in front of my age," he told the Star's Vinay Menon in May 2014. He added: "When I started, a young person would stop me and want a picture because they were a huge fan," he says. "Then it became, 'My mother loves you. I need to get a picture.' Now the thing that's starting to creep in is, 'My grandmother loves you.' So you kind of know the direction this is going."

Drake, RiRi date spawns matching shark tattoos

Colin McNeil
Metro | Toronto

Rihanna may have Love on the Brain, but Drake has it on his arm. The 6ix God was recently spotted with a camouflage shark tattooed on his right forearm — the same ink that Rihanna recently showed off in an Instagram post. The significance?

Drake reportedly rented out the entire Ripley's Aquarium for a private date with his love interest earlier this summer, in July. Rumour has it he bought her a stuffed shark, and the tat is a reference to the heartfelt gift. If that wasn't romantic enough, the musical power couple later took an affectionate selfie under the CN Tower. Now that's what we call Views From The 6.

The line between bling and beauty

REVIEW

C-Class had to be great—and fortunately it is

Sami Haj-Assaad
AutoGuide.com

With the A5 needing a refresh and starting to look old in the eyes of some socialites and the 4 Series lacking the style and sportiness that drivers in this segment are looking for, Mercedes-Benz is offering a shining star in its C-Class Coupe.

While the last generation C-Class Coupe showed up a few years after its sedan counterpart hit the market, this new-gen model is hot on the heels of the launch of the new sedan; it seems like Mercedes is eager to strut its stuff in this interesting market segment.

The luxury coupe competition has become stale and the only fresh new vehicles are coming from unusual sources, like the new, but polarizing Lexus RC. To turn that trend around, the new C-Class Coupe has to be fantastic. Fortunately, it is.

First impressions are important, and the C-Class walks a fine line between bling and beauty. While many of the test vehicles featured the brand's usually excessive looking diamond chrome grille option, these cars didn't look garish at all. Eighteen-inch wheels and other aggressive exterior appearance parts also helped the C-Class Coupe maintain a striking visual presence.

Sleek from all angles, this Coupe easily stands out alongside the bigger, more expensive Mercedes vehicles and coupes. The C-Class no longer has a second class design or a cheap interior; Mercedes' new interior design language is among the best in the market. Circular vents are accented by chunky, toggle-like switches and if the car features the upgraded Burmester audio system, the speaker grilles are like little art installations in their own right.

Throwing the C-Class around the back roads of Maine and New Hampshire is a good way to feel how the Coupe is tuned for more feedback and a tighter response in terms of steering and handling. However, most of the cars tested were equipped with the AMG Sport Package that included a sport suspension, so the ride did get a bit choppy, especially over broken pavement. Alternatively, the brand's Airmatic suspension smoothed out the ride and is a must-have option. While the suspension gives plenty of feedback, the steering is a bit lifeless.

But with its competition from BMW and Audi now stale, the introduction of the new C-Class is a refreshing sight in this niche segment. While the A5 and 3 Series Coupe have enjoyed success in the past, it's clear that the Mercedes C-Class Coupe is now the best two-door luxury car on the market.

2017 Lincoln MKZ wins top safety award

Jason Siu
AutoGuide.com

The 2017 Lincoln MKZ has earned the highest safety rating from the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety (IIHS).

The midsize luxury car shares its platform with the Ford Fusion, which also earned a Top Safety Pick+ designation from IIHS. Both cars had their front ends and bumpers modified to improve protection in frontal crashes and now earn a good rating in the small overlap test, compared with an acceptable rating for earlier models.

Like the 2017 Ford Fusion, the MKZ is available with an optional front crash prevention system that earns a superior rating. In IIHS track tests, the MKZ was able to avoid collisions at 19 km/h and 40 km/h.

To qualify for Top Safety Pick+, the top award from IIHS, a vehicle must earn good ratings in the small overlap front, moderate overlap front,

Installing child seats getting easier, safety agency says

Three vehicles have earned a top rating of good+ on the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety's (IIHS) LATCH ease-of-use ratings.

The agency launched its ratings of child seat installation hardware in vehicles in June 2015, and at the time, most of the 102 vehicles that were rated scored poor or marginal. Now, 170 current models have been evaluated and most are good or acceptable. This year also marks the first time a vehicle has received a good+ rating with the Audi Q7, Lexus RX and Toyota Prius all earning the highest marks.

"Frustrating child seat installations have become a familiar rite of parenthood," says Jessica Jermakian, an IIHS senior research engineer. "Unfortunately, these frustrations lead to mistakes that can have real consequences in the event of a crash. We're pleased to see automakers taking this issue seriously."

4 ALL-TIME HOTTEST CARS, ACCORDING TO PAGANI

While the performance of Pagani's automobiles is hard to argue with, the design of these supercars is what makes them truly desirable. In the words of Horacio Pagani himself, the engineering and design of the cars go hand in hand. We chatted with the automaker's founder and CEO to ask him what he considers to be some of the most beautiful cars of all time. SAMI HAJ-ASSAAD/AUTOGUIDE.COM

1 Jaguar E-Type

The Jaguar E-Type is one of the few non-Italian cars on Pagani's list. Originally introduced in 1961, the E-Type uses a front-engine, rear-wheel-drive layout with a 3.8-litre inline-six engine under its long hood. Making 265 horsepower, the E-Type was more than just a pretty machine — it could move, too. Many designers reference the E-Type as a major influence, so it's not a huge surprise to see Pagani give some props to this British icon.

2 Mercedes-Benz 300SL Gullwing

This choice must have been made by Pagani's inner engineer, because when the 300SL debuted, it was the fastest production car available. The 300SL was named for its unique gull-wing doors, and you can see that inspired Pagani.

3 Lamborghini Miura

The Lamborghini Miura has a place in history as being one of the first high-performance, mid-engined cars ever. It practically invented the term supercar, so it's no surprise to see it here on Mr. Pagani's list.

4 De Tomaso Pantera

The De Tomaso Pantera is one of the most misunderstood classics in supercar history. The combination of Italian styling with an American V8 is something that's hard to ignore, but many classic car connoisseurs balk at the quirky car. Fortunately, Pagani isn't one to deny this car's cool factor. Still, this is definitely a surprising entry on this list.

Holtby takes 'long road' back to Team Canada

WORLD CUP OF HOCKEY

Vezina winner last played for country in 2007 at U18s

When Braden Holtby last represented Canada on the international stage it was almost a decade ago and he barely played.

The 26-year-old from Lloydminster, Sask., has been slowly inching upward ever since. From fourth-round pick of the Washington Capitals to starting net-minder in the NHL to Vezina Trophy winner and record-setter and back once more with Team Canada, this time as the likely next-in-line behind Carey Price at the World Cup of Hockey.

"It's a long road," Holtby said following the second day of World Cup training camp. "I just always focused on that next goal, that next level trying to get there. It's always been the dream to be here, so you never really think twice about it you just do what's necessary."

Holtby played eight minutes 50 seconds at his last international experience nine years ago (2007), the backup to future Colorado Avalanche draft pick Trevor Cann at the under-18 championships in Finland. The Canadians finished fourth that year, despite boasting Steven Stamkos, Drew Doughty, and Logan Couture, all of whom would join Holtby again nearly a decade later on the latest incarnation of the Canadian World Cup team.

Doughty somehow remembers it all quite well, even down to the fact that Cann (who's yet to play an NHL game) and not Holtby, started. Couture recalled playing cards with Holtby in their Finnish hotel room, describing him as a goaltender who was long under the radar.

Holtby was passed over entirely for the world junior

"It's always been the dream to be here, so you never really think twice about it you just do what's necessary."

Braden Holtby

championships.

"Even back then I remember he was a good goalie," Doughty said. "Obviously to be on the under-18 team you've got to be a really good goalie and I guess he's just taken that talent to another level. He's one of the best goalies in the league now."

Holtby was shocked when Canada invited him to their summer Olympic training camp in 2013, somewhat in awe of the talent around him. He knew he wasn't part of the top group at that point, then just a couple years into his career with Washington.

"I knew the ability was there," Holtby said. "I just had to find it."

It didn't come right away. Holtby stumbled backward in the 2013-14 season (.915 save percentage) before leaping into the elite crowd with 41 wins, nine shutouts and a .923 save percentage two years ago. In capturing the Vezina last season, Holtby matched Martin Brodeur's single-season wins record, totalling 48 (in 12 fewer games than Brodeur) for the Capitals.

He doesn't look at his conquest as the league's top goaltender, nor his inclusion on Team Canada as turning points in a career that's always trended up. He circles back to the point when he first made it into the NHL, when he first realized he could compete for his ultimate goal: the Stanley Cup.

"And that's really the only focus," said Holtby, who went 48-9-7 last year as the Capitals were vanquished in the second round by Pittsburgh. "I'm not really too focused on other personal stuff."

Broncos settle in with Siemian

NFL SEASON PREVIEW

Champs look to relative no name in Super Bowl defence

Peyton Manning's successor isn't Brock Osweiler or Colin Kaepernick or Mark Sanchez, all of whom had better off-season odds than NFL novice Trevor Siemian.

When Broncos GM John Elway declined to overpay Osweiler, Manning's longtime backup bolted to Houston 48 hours after his mentor called it a career. Elway quickly acquired Sanchez from the Eagles but he really had his eyes fixed on Kaepernick, who rejected a pay cut to facilitate a trade from the 49ers to Denver.

So, Elway moved on — and he moved up in the first round of the draft, selecting Paxton Lynch of Memphis, who very well might be the franchise's future.

Trevor Siemian spent last season soaking in Gary Kubiak's West Coast offence under the tutelage of Peyton Manning and Brock Osweiler. JUSTIN EDMONDS/GETTY IMAGES

The present, though, belongs to Siemian, a QB who won the starting job with a mix of brains and brawn, precision and poise, steadiness and spunk.

The Carolina Panthers will certainly try to unnerve Siemian in his first NFL start Thursday night in the 2016 season opener.

Thing is, nobody at Broncos headquarters has ever seen the 2015 seventh-round pick get rattled.

Not when he was Osweiler's backup for two months last season when Manning was hurt.

“Who is Trevor Siemian? He's super intelligent, he knows a lot of stuff and there's a reason that they named him the starter.”

Kicker Brandon McManus

Not when he ran the scout team against Denver's destructive defence that brought home the Lombardi Trophy.

Not even when coach Gary Kubiak named him the starter. “He's the same guy: cool, calm and collected,” said wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders.

“He's not going to change. He's not going to waver. I know that he wants to show the world, ‘Hey, look at this guy out here, No. 13.’ I think he can make plays and make all the throws.” THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

+ ABOUT THE QB

■ Siemian was a high school star in central Florida as a QB and a third baseman.

■ He chose Big Ten school Northwestern as much for its academics as its athletics.

■ He played in 44 games for the Wildcats but started just 14 — yet still finished as the school's fourth-leading passer.

■ He tore an ACL in his final college game and that scared away plenty of teams but not the Broncos, who chose him with the 250th overall pick in 2015, after which Siemian declared, “I can't think of a better scenario” than to learn from Peyton Manning and Brock Osweiler.

David Eng in Rio de Janeiro on Tuesday. CANADIAN PARALYMPIC COMMITTEE

Hoops star chosen for flag duty

RIO 2016

When David Eng made his Paralympic debut 12 years ago in Athens, coach Mike Frogley would jot down a word each day and pin that word on the wall.

They were words like “leadership” and “commitment,” character traits Frogley wanted his players to embody.

They were words, Eng decided then and there, to live by.

“I started focusing on that,” Eng said. “That was what I wanted to become, was that type of person.”

The 39-year-old veteran of Canada's wheelchair basketball team has been chosen to carry the Maple Leaf into the opening ceremony of the Paralympic Games on Wednesday.

Frogley, now the high performance director for Wheelchair Basketball Canada, said there was no better choice. Every great player and every team, he said, “starts with great character.”

“And that's what David is: great character that allows us the opportunity to be great,” Frogley said. “And he's a great representation of Canada, (he) embodies all the things that Canadians hold in the highest regard, his work ethic, his discipline, his commitment to the team ... those are things all Canadians share in, so they share in him marching out holding our flag.”

The two-time Paralympic gold medallist, who was cheered on by both the men's and women's wheelchair teams at his news conference Tuesday morning, will be competing at his fourth Games. Canada won gold in Eng's debut in 2004, took the silver at the 2008 Beijing Games and won gold four years ago in London. THE CANADIAN PRESS

PENNY OLEKSIK

Back to books for Canada's golden girl

Penny Oleksiak is kind of a big deal at her high school.

The star swimmer, who won four medals at the Rio Olympics, returned to class on Tuesday as she enters grade 11, but her recently found fame is something she's playing down.

“I don't think I'm a celebrity,” she said with a big smile.

“I think everyone knows me already.”

Oleksiak is a bona fide celebrity after this summer's medal haul, which culminated in carrying the country's flag at the closing ceremony. It is an issue that school officials have been discussing over the past few weeks.

Monarch Park Collegiate in Toronto's east end decided to hold a news conference on the first day of school with the hope that normalcy will return to Oleksiak's life by Wednesday.

After a bit of chit-chatting in the office, Bryan McAlpine, the school's head of athletics, decided to take a different approach: He asked if the star athlete still planned to keep score in volleyball games — something she did last year.

“For sure I'm going to,” Oleksiak said.

“This is going to sound really bad and I don't think I'm going to say it, but I'll say it: it's another opportunity to hang out with your friends during school. It's fun to score keep especially when my friends are playing volleyball — it's awesome.”

Oleksiak's answer to McAlpine came as a relief to principal Cynthia Abernethy, who believes the 16-year-old student will easily slide back into high school life as a student.

“We were nervous about Penny coming back and having to teach a celebrity, but it took two minutes to speak with Penny to get back at ease and to realize this is a kind of a normal place for her,” McAlpine said.

“As of tomorrow, Penny goes back to four periods a day and we're going to crack that whip.”

IN BRIEF

Para ticket sales hit 1.6M

With the Rio Paralympics set to begin Wednesday, organizers say ticket sales have jumped from around 200,000 to 1.6 million, and a spirit of optimism now pervades the cash-strapped event.

“It's helped by the fact that the Brazilian team did so well in the final weekend of the Olympics,” Craig Spence, a spokesman for the International Paralympic Committee, said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Irish official mum on ticket-scalping probe

A high-ranking Olympic official is declining to answer police questions related to alleged ticket scalping during last month's Olympic Games in Rio de Janeiro.

A police official said Olympic Council of Ireland President Patrick Hickey declined to answer questions. Hickey also did not comment upon leaving a Rio de Janeiro station.

Hickey was jailed during the Olympics. He was set free last week after a judge ruled that he wasn't a risk to the investigation. His passport has been confiscated, and he must remain in Brazil until the probe is concluded.
